

Caselex wins EIA award

[Luxembourg, 17 March 2008]: The European Information Association (EIA) has awarded Caselex the 2008 'EIA Award for excellence in European information provision (electronic sources category)'.

Best electronic EU information source in 2008

The EIA Awards is presented annually to encourage better quality of EU information. Caselex' prize in the category for publications and products, electronic sources, represents an acknowledgement of its contribution to bring highly needed case law linked to EU law from all corners of Europe into a user friendly service where traditional access barriers, such as multiple languages, have been eliminated.

Caselex boosts quality of EU's case law information

By living up to the EIA's objective of improving the quality of EU information, Caselex has demonstrated its usefulness and capability of meeting the needs of its target groups, being legal professionals and EU information specialists. Moreover the premium online service is filling an apparent gap in the supply of legal oriented EU information, with the award marking the service to lead the way in what may emerge as a single European legal information market.

Inspiration for further service developments

Mr Stig Marthinsen, the co-founder and managing director of Caselex, says "the prize represents a milestone and gives big inspiration to the team behind Caselex who will now be motivated to move forward with new concepts for additional premium content modules adding value to legal professionals' work or study".
